Email from Linda 4/15/2013

Barb,

I've been working on the presentation and I have it pared down. It's at H:\INFORMATION SERVICES\SystematicReviews\Paper Research\Retrospective Res Proj (MLA)\MLA 2013 Abstract & Meeting\Presentation\20130415 SR Proj draft1.pptx

There are a couple of things I need your help with:

slide 4 - I have 56 questions - that's the number on the main survey - does the supplement alter this number at all?

	Answer: NO

- [x] slide 5 - need response rate
  Done
- [x] slides 6 and 7 - If we have % in the title do we need to say 'Value in %'?
  - Take off decimal and make numbers larger DONE
  - Make words larger? DONE - I made the font 22 pt, but it shrinks when the graph is reduced in size to fit on the slide.

- [x] slide 12 - I think we talked about reporting % correct, rather than the actual # correct DONE, but I can't seem to get the x labels to be % instead of decimal (ex .11 instead of 11%)
  - put numbers on top of bars (For slide 12 I meant hovering over - like in slide 8. - from clarification email)

- [x] slide 15 - I like the idea of the format - how can we make it easier to read?
  - Can we not include "not working at the time"? How did

Session: 37 – Librarians as Partners in Addressing Health Disparities

5/5/2013

4:30 PM – 6:00 PM

Room: 301

The movement to identify and eliminate racial and other health disparities is increasingly interprofessional and international in scope. Medical librarians are particularly well positioned to play a key role in this effort. While a growing body of evidence indicates that racial and other health disparities persist, data also suggest that increasing clinician awareness can decrease these disparities. Resources and literature related to many aspects of health disparities are still frequently underutilized and poorly identified. Medical librarians can play a primary role in identifying, organizing, and disseminating these resources to clinicians and other professionals engaged in regional, national, and global initiatives to eliminate health disparities. Contributed papers for this session will include ways to work with other professions, identification of resources, and roles for librarians in addressing health
